Fairy.

Let Me In.
When the summer evening's shadows Veiled the earth's calm bosom o'er, Came a young child faint and weary, Tapping at the cottage door:
"Wandering through the winding footpaths My weary feet too long have been,
Let me in, oh! gentle mother, Let me in."

Years passed on—his eager spirit Gleefully watched the dying hours, "I will be a child no longer, Only new sorrows brought."
Finding bliss in birds and flowers;
I will seek the bands of pleasure;
I will join the merry dance;
Let me in to joy and gladness, Let me in."

Years sped on—yet vainly yearning, Murmuring still the restless heart:
"I am tired of heartless bliss;
Let the glittering chain depart;
I have found in worldly pleasure Naught to happiness akin, Let me into love's warm precincts,
Let me in."

Years flew on—a youth no longer, Still he owned the restless heart,
"I am tired of love's warm precincts, Sweet voiced youth we must part;
I will gain a laurel chaplet,
And a world's applause will win;
Let me in to fame and glory,
Let me in."

Years fled on—the restless spirit Never found the bliss it sought; Ancestral hopes and grand blessings Left him cold and disappointed;
"I am tired of earth's vain glory, I am tired of grief and sin;
Let me in to rest eternal,
Let me in."

Thus the unquiet yearning spirit, Taunted by vague regret, Knocks and calls at every gateway, In vain and fruitless quest; Ever striving some new blessing, Some new happiness to win—
At some portal ever saying,
"Let me in."

Literature.
The Mistake.
"I'll never do it,—never so long as I live!" And the boy clenched his hands together, and strove to push down the door, his face flushed with anger and shame. "I'd ask the minister's pardon, in father's presence, of course I would; but to go before the whole academy, boys and girls, and do this! His whole frame fairly quivered at the thought. "Ellsworth Grant, you'll brand yourself as a coward and a fool all the days of your life!"

But father never retracts, and he said I must do this or leave the school, and go out on the farm to work, and the whole village will know the reason, and I shall be ashamed to look anybody in the face. I've a good mind to run away. The boy's voice grew lower, and a troubled, bewildered expression gathered on his flushed features.

"It would be very hard to leave all the old places; and then, never to see Nellie again; it would break her heart, I know it would."
And his face worked convulsively a moment, but he settled down into a look of dogged resolution the next. "I mustn't think of that now though it's only ten miles to the seaport, and I could walk that in an hour, and get a place on some ship to sail, before father was any wiser. Some time I'd come back, of course, but not until I was old enough to be my own master!" The boy sat down and buried his face in his hands, and the sunset of the summer's day poured its currents of crimson and amber into the chamber and over the bowed figure of the boy.

At last he lifted his head—there was a look of quiet resolve in the dark hazel eyes and about the usually smiling mouth, which in youth is so painful, because it always indicates mental suffering.

"Ellsworth Grant was, at this time, just fifteen; he was his father's only son, and he was wealthy."

The deacon was a stern, severe man; while Ellsworth inherited his mother's warm sympaty. His father was a man of unswerving integrity and rectitude—a man who would have parted with his right hand sooner than have committed a dishonorable act; but one who had a few sympathies for faults indigenous to peculiar temperaments and character; a man whose heart had never learned the height and depth, and the all embracing beauty of that mightiest truth, which is the one diamond among all the pearls and precious stones of the Bible. "Be ye charitable."

He was a hard, exacting parent, and Ellsworth was a fun-loving, mischievous boy, that everybody loved, despite his faults, and the scrapes he was always getting his neck into. There is no doubt that Deacon Grant loved his son, but he was not a demonstrative man; and then, it is said, and story that may be written of many a parent—he didn't understand his child; and there was no mother, with her soft voice and soothing words, to come between them.

Ellsworth's last offence can be told in a few words. The grape-vine, which, heavy with purple clusters, trailed over the kitchen windows of the school-master's residence, had been robbed of more than half its fruit, one Saturday afternoon, when the inmates were absent.

The perpetrators of this deed were, however discovered to be a party of the school boys, among whom was Ellsworth.

The rest of the scholars privately solicited and obtained the school teacher's pardon, but the deacon, who was terribly shocked at this evidence of his son's want of principle, insisted that he should make a public confession of his fault before the assembled school.

In vain Ellsworth explained and entreated.
His father was invulnerable—and the boy's laughing spirit entirely mortified.

"Ellsworth, Ellsworth, where are you going?" cried a voice, that made the boy start and turn round eagerly, as he stood at the garden gate, while the light of the rising day was flushing the grey mountains in the east with rose-colored hues. A moment later, a small light figure, crowned with golden hair, and a large sword thrown over its right dress, stood by the boy's side.

Fairy.

"Why, Nellie! how could you! you'll catch cold in your bare feet among these dews!"

"I can't help it, Ellsworth!" It was a tea-swollen face that looked up pitifully to the boy's. "You see, I haven't slept any hardly all night, thinking about you, and so I was up, looking out of the window, and saw you going down the walk, and I followed you."

Well, Nellie, pushing back the yellow tangled hair, and looking at her fondly, "you see I can't do what father says I must to-day, and so I'm going off."

"Oh, Ellsworth, what will Uncle say?" cried the child between her shivering and weeping, "what will Uncle say? How long shall you be gone?"

"I don't know, exactly, I shan't be back to-day, though. But you mustn't stand here talking any longer. Father will be up soon, you know. Now, good-bye, Nellie."

There was a sob in his throat, as he leaned forward and kissed the sweet face, that had only seen a dozen summers, and then was gone.

"Go and call Ellsworth to breakfast, will you, Ellen?" said the deacon, two hours later.
"He isn't up stairs, Uncle." And then as they sat down to theirs, Ellen briefly related what had transpired.

The deacon's face grew dark as she proceeded. "He thinks to elude the confession, and frighten me by running off for a day or two," he said, "he will find he is mistaken."

So that day and the next passed, and the deacon said nothing more, but Ellen, who was his adopted child, and the orphan daughter of his wife's most intimate friend, noticed that he began to look restless, and to start anxiously at the sound of a foot fall; but still Ellsworth came not.

At last a strict search was instituted, and it was discovered that Ellsworth had gone to sea on a ship bound for some port of the western coast of Asia, on a three years' voyage.

"I hope he will come back a better boy than when he left," was the deacon's solitary commentary, but in the long nights Ellen used to hear him walking restlessly up and down in his room, and his black hair began to be thickly streaked with gray.

But the worst was not yet come. One November night, when the winds clamored and stormed furiously among the old apple trees in the garden, Deacon Grant and Ellen sat by the fire in the old kitchen, when the former remoted the wrapper from his weekly newspaper, and the first passage that met his eyes was one that told him how the ship—the one in which Ellsworth had sailed, had been wrecked off the coast, and every soul on board had perished.

Then the voice of the father woke up in the heart of Deacon Grant. He staggered toward Ellen with a white-laggard face, and a fearful cry, "My boy! my boy! It was more than my proud spirit could bear." Oh! Ellsworth! I had to look down, and his head fell into the lap of the frightened child.

And then Deacon Grant was a changed man. I did not know which was the most to blame, the father or the son, in the sight of God, who judges so justly.

And equally to the heart of many a parent and many a child, the story has its message and its warning.

Eight years had passed. It was summer time again, and the hills were green again, and the fields were yellow with their glory.

It was in the morning, and Deacon Grant sat under the porch of the great old rambling cottage; for the day was very warm, and the top was wrapped round thickly with a hop vine.

These eight years had greatly changed the deacon. He seemed to have stopped very suddenly into old age, and the light wind that stirred the green leaves shook the grey hairs over his wrinkled forehead, as he sat there, reading the village newspaper, with eyes that had begun to grow dim.

And every little while, fragments of some old-fashioned tune floated into the old man's mind, sweet, stray fragments, and sitting back and forth from the pantry to the breakfast table was a young girl not handsome, but with a sweet, fair, rosy countenance whose smiles seemed to hover naturally as sunshine over June skies.

She wore a pink calico dress, the sleeves tucked above her elbows, and a checked apron. Altogether she was a fair, plump, healthful looking country girl.

And while the old man read the paper under the hop-vine, and the young girl hummed and flattered between the pantry, and the kitchen table, a young man opened the small, front gate, and went up the narrow path to the house.

He went up very slowly, staring all around him, with an eager watchful look, and comparing the muscles of his mouth worked and quivered, as one's will when strong emotions are shaking the heart.

He had a firm, sinewy frame of middling height; he was not handsome, but there was something in his face you would have liked; perhaps it was the light away down in the dark eyes; perhaps it was the strength and cheerfulness fore-shadowed in the lines about the mouth. I cannot tell, it was an instinctive as it was certain you would have liked that face.

The door was open, and the young man walked into the wide hall. He stood still a moment, staring under the low wall, and on the palm leaved paper that covered the side.
Then a thick mist broke into his eyes, and he walked on like one in a dream, apparently quite forgetting that this was not his own home.

I think those low sweet fragments of song unconsciously drew his steps to the kitchen, for a few moments later he stood in the doorway, watching the fair girl as she removed the small rolls of yellow butter from a wooden box to an earthen plate. I can hardly transcribe the expression of the man's face.
It was one of mingled doubt, surprise, eagerness, that, at last, all converged into one joyful certainty.

"Merciful man!" The words broke from the girl's lips, and the last roll of butter fell from the little hands, as in a twinkling she saw the stranger standing in the doorway, and her rosy cheeks actually turned pale with the start of surprise.

The exclamation seemed to recall the young man to himself. He removed his hat. "Excuse me," he said, with a bow of instinctive grace, "but can you tell me where Mr. Deacon Grant resides here?"

Amusement.

Too FEARFUL TO CONTEMPLATE.—There is a work advertised, called Every Man a Lawyer. What a state of society!

Corrupt persons desiring to lessen their circumference should apply to some newspaper establishment for the office of collector.

A sharp lawyer's clerk, when up for examination, was asked what was the first thing he would do when asked to bring an action? To which interrogatory he replied, "I get £10 on account." He passed.

The BRIGHTEST CROWN.—The Talmud says that "there are three crowns—the crown of the law, the crown of priesthood, and the crown of royalty; but a crown of a good name is superior to all."

"Mike, can you account for the extraordinary curve in that horse's back? "Sure an' it's just itself can tell ye, sir. Ye see, sir, before the baste was your property, he was backed again an' a fish horse that baste her hollow, and she never got straight again."

GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

The Most Valuable Spring and Summer Medicine in the World.

Dr. Halsey's Forest Wine!

Patronized by the Nobility and Medical Faculty of England, and esteemed the most Extraordinary Medicine to the World.

MEDICINES containing molasses or liquorice, like the boasted Sarsaparilla, require many large bottles to procure the slightest change to health. The Forest Wine is altogether a different article. It contains no syrups to give it consistency, but acquires its excellent flavor, and powerful medicinal properties from the vegetable plants of which it is composed. The Forest Wine combines the virtues of the

with other valuable plants whose properties are still more effective.

Its high concentration, renders it one of the most efficient medicines now in use. Sometimes less than a single bottle restores the lingering patient from weakness, debility, and sickness, to strong and vigorous health. Every dose shows its good effects on the constitution, and improves the state of the health. The Forest Wine is recommended in the strongest terms, for all complaints of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Nervous Disorders, Bilious Affections, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, Female Complaints, Scrophula, and all Disorders arising from BAD BLOOD and Impure Habits of the System.

Testimony of Mr. Nathan Mathews, a highly respectable and wealthy citizen of Newark, N. J.

Dr. G. W. HALSEY.—I believe your Forest Wine and Pills have been the means of saving my life. When I commenced taking them, I laid at the point of death, with Dropsy, Piles and Asthma. My physicians had given me over completely cured. While in this dreadful situation, your Forest Wine and Pills were procured for me, and before I had finished the first bottle of Wine and Box of Pills, I experienced great relief; my body and limbs, which were greatly swollen, became sensibly reduced. Hopes of my recovery began now to revive, and after continuing the use of your medicines for about a month, the Dropsy, with which I was afflicted, was completely cured. My life was placed in such great danger, was nearly lost. I have continued the use of your medicines until the present time, and I now enjoy as perfect health as ever I did in my life, although I am more than sixty years of age.

Yours, respectfully, N. MATHEWS.

Newark, N. J., Dec. 19, 1847.

NERVOUS DISORDERS

Are diseases of the mind as well of the body are usually brought on by troubles and affliction, and are most common to persons of delicate constitutions and sensitive minds. Low spirits, melancholy, frightful dreams, and fearful anticipations of evil from the slightest causes, generally accompany nervous disorders. The Forest Wine and Pills are an energetic remedy in these complaints.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Joseph C. Paulding, dated Philadelphia, September 7th, 1848.

Dear Sir, your Forest Wine and Pills have cured my wife of a dreadful Nervous Disorder, with which
